SpaceX launches first satellites for Musk's Starlink internet service

MILETTE
Cape Canaveral (Florida),

TECH ENTREPRENEUR
Elon Musk's SpaceX launched a Falcon 9 rocket from Florida on Thursday to carry the first of five dozen small satellites into low-Earth orbit for its Starlink internet rocket blasted off from Cape Canaveral Air Force Station about 10:30 pm local time (23:00 GMT on Friday), marking a milestone in a mission aimed at generating bandwidth for Musk's larger ambitions in space.

The launch came a week after a back-to-back countdown for the mission were called off — once due to high winds over the Cape and the other in order to update the software and "triple-check" all systems.

The Falcon 9 was due to launch its cargo of 60 satellites about an hour after Musk's launch. Each one weighs 1,400 pounds (627 kg), making it the heaviest payload ever for SpaceX's rocket to date. The 58 satellites are planned to form the initial constellation of beaming signals for high-speed internet service from space to paying customers around the globe.

Musk has said he sees the new Starlink venture as an important new revenue stream for his California-based Space Exploration Technologies, known as SpaceX, whose launch service income he expects to top out at around $3 billion a year.

Speaking to reporters last week, Musk said that makes Starlink pivotal in helping pay for his larger goals of developing a new spacecraft to fly paying customers to the moon and for eventually trying to colonise Mars.

"We think this is a key stepping stone on the way towards establishing a self-sustaining city on Mars and a base on the moon," said Musk, the billionaire entrepreneur who is also chief executive officer of automaker Tesla.

At least 17 launches carrying similar payloads are needed to achieve constant internet coverage of most of the world, Musk said. Starlink is only currently authorised for operations in the United States. Musk faces stiff competition. In February, Airbus-backed OneWeb launched its own clutch of satellites, while LeoSat Enterprises and Canada's Telesat are also working to build data networks. — REUTERS
